

Family matters

In 2011, Sarah's brother, William, was diagnosed with multiple sclerosis. Sarah suggested that he could set himself a challenge to fundraise for a good cause. That is how Sarah found herself 10,000 feet above the Salisbury Plains ready to skydive for MS-UK...

'The support William has received from his MS Nurse and MS-UK has been amazing. I suggested my brother could set himself a challenge in order to fundraise, as a way of saying thank you. My suggestion of a skydive backfired when he only agreed to do it if I came too!' explains Sarah, who took part in a skydive with her brother for MS-UK.

Sarah was a little hesitant to begin with. 'I am terrified of heights. Not a massive fan of small planes either, so not really ever considered doing a jump! But if William can overcome massive physical issues each day, then this was the least I could do,' says Sarah.

'My brother and I have contacted MS-UK many times for information and I have really appreciated their support. To help them continue their vital work, fundraising for them seemed a great idea.'

On the day of the jump, their family rallied around them to support Sarah and William. Sarah says, 'our parents drove up from Devon to make sure we went through with the challenge (and landed in one piece!) and my fiancé was there cheering us on the whole time.'
